Presentation

The Corporate Chair “Wine and Tourism”, EM Strasbourg Business School, University of Strasbourg, together with the Agrifood Management and Innovation Lab, Ca’ Foscari University of Venice in Italy and the Weincampus in Neustadt/Weinstrasse in Germany co-organise the 3rd International Research Workshop in Wine Tourism “Trends for a sustainable and resilient wine tourism industry”.

The 2023 workshop will take place in the areas of the production of Prosecco wine, one of the most successful PDOs in European wines. It aims at allowing the international audience to gain an in-depth knowledge of the specificities of the production area and of its experience and tourism-related opportunities.

The 2023 International Research Workshop is endorsed by two Consortia of the Area (Consorzio di Tutela del Conegliano Valdobbiadene Prosecco DOCG and Consorzio di Tutela Prosecco Doc) and by the Association for the UNESCO World Heritage Site Prosecco Hills. It is also supported by the French Association of Tourism Management (AFMAT) affiliated to the French Foundation of Management Education (FNEGE).

More generally, the workshop is designed to gather both wine and tourism academics and professionals in order to discuss the current challenges for the international wine tourism industry and delineate its future directions.

Aims and themes

The wine industry can no longer be dissociated from tourism activities as shown by wine tourism activities progressively flourishing around the world, with wine regions documented in more than 70 different countries and thousands of wineries offering their own distinctive portfolio of wines.

Wine tourism is a multifaceted activity inspired and driven by the appeal that goes beyond simply the tasting and purchasing of wine. It includes a combination of food, accommodation, recreational activities (wine events, festivals, shows), cultural attractions, and an enjoyable rural and natural landscape. Thus, wine tourism is touted as a winery's golden ticket to increase wine sales, to turn visitors into brand ambassadors, to get repeat visits and to achieve brand recognition and brand loyalty. From a larger perspective, wine tourism implies the possibility for tourists to enjoy and experience all the attributes of a wine region. Still, wine tourism requires a solid business model acknowledging costs and service requirements to ensure resilience and strategic value creation potential. Thus presented, wine tourism is at the heart of current concerns related to the issue of resilience and sustainability.

There is a need to adapt to the rapid changes that are taking place on the structural, ecological, economic and consumer behavioral levels which leads to the questioning of wine tourism through several prisms. It is therefore about survival, change, adaptation, innovation, resilience and sustainability of the wine business through tourism.

The aim of the International Research Workshop is to contribute to wine tourism research and calls for research papers investigating topics related (but not limited) to:

- Eco-system, new business models and innovation at the intersection between wine production and promotion of destinations and territories
- Entrepreneurship in wine tourism industry
- Strategic management: cooperation, collaboration, networks and alliances to promote the territories of wine and to generate local economic development
- ICTs and digital practices in wine tourism and wine-related territorial development
- Wine tourism experience
- Cross-cultural studies and cultural influences
- Sustainability, ESG and circular economy in the wine tourism sector
- Wine tourism events/festivals
- Wine destination management
- Cellar door management and wine hospitality
- Competences, skills and professional development trajectories in the wine tourism sector
- Case studies: e.g. best practice
